

VIRTUAL DEVOTION, by Eric Coble

A satirical look at the end of times as brought to you by—cable television! Virtual Devotion features a day in the life of a zealous but shattered family, trying to find salvation through—and in spite of—their faith. Pete, a televangelist for "The Mature Warriors for Christ," preaches violent hate against sinners to his 35 million viewers. Anne, a sweet young telemarketer for the Happy Halo Ministry is desperate to raise money to send religious CDs to children in Africa. Ruth is a TV junkie, viewing the world from her armchair until she sees the face of Ezekiel the prophet in her tapioca pudding. And Jesus, only Son of the Living God, has come back to Earth. But why now? And will anyone notice? All four eventually meet through the Home Shopping Network selling religious artifacts, just moments before what may just be the end of the world.

When a smart and talented musician named Denise heads to college, she becomes a member of a cultish church, severing all ties with her loving family. Her younger siblings, Cliff and Jill, struggle to hold it all together, stung by Denise's decision to cut them out of her life. But a chance sighting of Denise at a New Jersey strip mall leads Cliff and his best buddy Duffy on a road trip into the heart of a deepening mystery. Why would a girl like Denise fall for the hollow promises of a sleazy preacher? Could it be that blind faith is just another term for a desperate need to belong?
